THE CITY OF WATERTOWN, NEW YORK

WATERTOWN, the largest city in New York state north of the main line of the New York Central railroad, the "Metropolis of the North Country," is situated in Jefferson County in the Black River Valley about seven miles from the junction of the river with Lake Ontario. The city is finely located on the banks of the river, which divides it into two unequal parts, the larger of which is situated on the south side of the stream. Most of the business blocks, the City and County buildings, and by far the larger portion of the handsome residences are on the south side of the Black River, while the northern section of the city is largely taken up with the vast manufacturing plants and the homes of many of the thousands who find their daily employment in the factories and mills.

"Watertown" the city is called, and this name was chosen owing to the peculiar advantages which come to Watertown from its location on a river which offers chances for the development and utilization of water power second to none in the State of New York. Despite the fact that Watertown is, in a sense, isolated and notwithstanding the fact that it depends for transportation on a single track railroad, it has grown steadily since it was founded and today is hovering around the thirty thousand mark in population. The city is first and foremost a manufacturing center, but it is also a distributing point for the large section embraced within the limits of Jefferson, Franklin and St. Lawrence counties.

In the channel of the Black River, and within the city limits, are a number of islands, the largest of which are Sewall's island with an area of fifteen acres and Beebee's island which covers five acres, and these are given over almost entirely to manufacturing plants. The banks of the river are lined with factories and mills for a distance of two miles, and in fact there is an almost unbroken string from Carthage, eighteen miles east of Watertown, to Dexter, which is seven miles to the westward and which is situated on the shores of Lake Ontario. Within the limits of the city of Watertown, the Black River has a drop of one hundred and twelve feet, and thus there is always plenty of power to turn the numerous wheels of the manufacturing establishments.

The city is beautifully situated on a broad plateau that spreads back to terraces of limestone, which are supposed to have marked the shore-line of the eastern-most of the Great Lakes at some by-gone time.

Aside from the water power, however, Watertown has many advantages. It is in the center of one of the greatest cheese producing sections of the United States, and the Produce Exchange, which meets every Saturday from May to November, is the largest inland cheese board in the world. Within a few miles are quarries of limestone and iron ore mines, while the farm lands within a radius of one hundred and fifty miles are among the most productive in the country today.

The climate of Northern New York is, with the exception of perhaps two months of extreme cold in the winter, pleasing and invigorating. The Autumn, Spring and Summer seasons are delightful and the winters, while often cold, are of a kind which does not usually affect the health of the people adversely. That Watertown is a healthful place is proven by the health records of the State of New York, which show that during 1906 the death rate was only sixteen per one thousand inhabitants.

Few cities are more pleasing to the casual visitor than is Watertown with its handsome public buildings, well kept Public Square which may justly be termed the center of the business activities of the city, the beautiful parks and the scores of handsome homes, of which Watertown is justly proud and which surpass in point of attractiveness those of any city of the size of Watertown in New York state.

Few, if any, cities can boast of a city park of the size or beauty of Watertown's. Extending in a long semi-circle to the east and south, within easy walking distance of the residential sections of the municipality, lies the City Park, gift of an unknown donor and covering several hundred acres. It commands a matchless view of Watertown and of the Black River valley and furnishes a place of recreation for hundreds during the spring, summer and autumn. Here are well kept roads, innumerable beautiful walks, countless shady dells and bowers, a wading pool and in fact any number of delightful spots which lure the people of the city away from their cares and troubles. Aside from the City Park there are a number of small plots of ground, mostly located at the junctions of streets, which serve to break the monotony of the city buildings and give a dash of color to many portions of Watertown.

As it was said of old that "All Roads Lead to Rome," so it might be said with equal truth in Watertown, that all roads lead to Public Square, for upon this broad, open space and the streets leading therefrom are centered practically all the business interests of the city. At either end of

Looking down Court Street

Public Square is a miniature park, a monument dedicated to the Soldiers and Sailors of Jefferson County occupying the western park. At the west end of the Square is located a handsome fountain presented to the city by Mrs. Roswell P. Flower and perhaps fifty yards south of this, at the entrance to Washington street, stands a statue of the man whose family has been linked with the history of Watertown from earliest times, Former Governor Roswell P. Flower.

The business blocks are for the most part situated on Public Square, and are in nearly every instance modern, convenient and built according to well approved plans. The business section of the city is compact and well laid out. Doubtless the most magnificent building in Watertown, and also in Northern New York, is the Public Library, given to the city as a memorial to her father, Hon. Roswell P. Flower, by Mrs. John Byron Taylor. The building is of classic design, constructed of white marble and is in every respect a triumph of the designer's skill and the builder's art. The building stands in beautiful grounds and is one in which the city and its people may well take pride, while it has conferred a great boon upon the thousands who draw books from it every year.

The County Buildings, consisting of a Court House, Clerk's Office and County Building are grouped on Arsenal street, west of and within a few minutes' walk of Public Square. East of the County Buildings is the site on which the new post office, for which Congress has recently granted an appropriation of $77,000, is soon to be built.

The City Hall, in which are the municipal offices, the police and city courts and the city jail, stands within a block of Public Square. It was built in 1895 and 1896 at a cost of $56,000.

The fire department has at present three engine houses, and two more, one on each side of Black River, are being rushed to completion.

Of churches Watertown has its full quota and among the number are edifices which will hold their own as handsome places of worship at any place and at any time. Trinity Episcopal Church, the French Catholic Church of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, the First Presbyterian Church, Church of the Holy Family, and the recently dedicated All Souls Universalist Church are among the most beautiful in the city. Nothing shows more plainly that Watertownians have not forgotten their religious life in the pursuit of wealth than does the fact that within three years no fewer than four churches have been dedicated, while three more are planned and almost ready to be started.

Amusement may be had at the City Opera House, which yearly presents a high class list of attractions, or at the new vaudeville house, the Orpheum, which was thrown open to the public in the fall of 1907 and which presents high class vaudeville entertainments. Grange Hall on upper State street and near the City Park is the meeting place of one of the most flourishing granges in the state.

Hotel accommodations are ample. The New Woodruff House, renovated and under new management, and the Hotel LeRay, a thoroughly modern house thrown open during the winter of 1906-7, the Hardiman, the American and the Crowner House fully meet the demands of the many visitors to the city.

A high school, not yet five years old and already taxed to its utmost capacity, under the supervision of the Board of Regents of New York state, and offering courses to meet the needs of all, and eleven grammar schools form the public school system of the city. In the high school are fifteen instructors and upwards of five hundred pupils. Connected with the institution are a gymnasium, library and well equipped laboratories. Recently courses in commercial subjects, cooking and manual training have been added to the curriculum of the school and these are well patronized. The institution offers a four year course which fits for any college in the United States. The grammar schools, one of which is now in the process of construction, prepare students to enter the high schools and ground them in the rudiments. On the north side of the river the Sisters of St. Joseph conduct the Immaculate Heart Academy, a school for young ladies, which has about one hundred pupils and which offers among other courses an unexcelled course in music. In addition to the public schools there are two orphanages, one conducted by the Roman Catholic Sisters of St. Joseph and the other controlled by a board of trustees, which offer courses of study to children whose parents are either dead or unable to care for them. These orphanages, known respectively as the Jefferson County and St. Patrick's, have done much commendable charitable work.

Two daily evening newspapers each receiving the service of the Associated Press, three semi-weekly and two weekly newspapers give the people of Watertown and vicinity the news "while it is news."

In charitable institutions Watertown has kept pace with the demand. The two orphanages have been referred to. There are in addition two hospitals, one the "House of the Good Samaritan," better known as the City hospital, having been established in 1881 largely through the earnest and untiring efforts of the ladies of Trinity and Grace Episcopal churches, and the other, St. Joachim's hospital, being conducted by the Roman Catholic Sisters of Mercy. Both give excellent service and each has a training school where nurses are fitted for their life work of mercy and care. At the City hospital during the year closing October 1, 1907, seven hundred and three patients received treatment. The Henry Keep Home, founded by Mrs. Henry Keep Schley as a memorial to her husband in 1856, was built as a home for the aged and infirm who have no other home. A small fee is charged at admittance and thereafter the inmates are supported by the income from several office buildings which has been set aside for that purpose. Just outside the city limits, in the town of Pamelia, is the Jefferson County alms-house.

The municipal government of Watertown is vested in a Mayor, a President of the Common Council and a Common Council or Board of Aldermen, consisting of two representatives from each of the six wards of the city. All city officials are elected for two years. The police department is composed of a chief, at present Gaylord L. Baxter, two sergeants, and fifteen patrolmen. The fire department, which consists of a chief, an assistant chief, four captains and twenty-eight men, has three companies in commission and considerable up-to-date apparatus for fire fighting. The police and fire departments have both made enviable records in the past. A board of education, a board of water commissioners, a board of public works and boards of safety and health complete the list of city boards. The members of the last three bodies are appointed by the Mayor. Members of the boards of education and water commissioners are elected.

Of the numerous manufacturing plants, the largest in Watertown is the plant of the New York Air Brake Company which employs about 2,700 men and which is one of the two concerns in the United States manufacturing air brakes. The business of this company has grown wonderfully and its presence in Watertown has done not a little in the development and expansion of the city. Four carriage companies, the H. H. Babcock, the Union Carriage and Gear Company, the Watertown Carriage Company and the Excelsior Carriage Company annually turn out a quantity of wagons and vehicles of every description which find their way to all known parts of the globe. Two flour and feed mills, those of Farwell &

Rhines and A. H. Herrick & Son, the J. B. Wise lock factory, the Bagley & Sewall Company, manufacturers of paper making machinery, the George A. Lance foundry, the paper mills of the Taggart Brothers and the Knowlton Brothers and the Watertown silk mill and the Nill & Jess bakery are only a few of the numerous manufacturing establishments along the banks of the Black River.

The five National banks of the city showed on August 22, 1907, a total capital and surplus of $1,661,034 and deposits of $4,806,983.39. There are in addition two savings banks, deposits and surplus $10,000,000. All of the banks declare semi-annual dividends and have done so many years.

The growth of a city's business may be gauged by the increase of receipts at the post office and, judged by this standard, Watertown has grown rapidly, for in 1905 the receipts were $72,203.14. This was increased to $82,535.48 in 1906, while in 1907 the total receipts were $85,476.21.

In 1907 the city tax list showed taxable property to a valuation of $14,217,600. The city tax rate is limited to $17.00 on $1,000.

The chief residential section of Watertown lies on the southern side of the Black River and here may be found homes which are unsurpassed for beauty, comfort and in many cases for luxury. Washington street, a broad asphalt paved avenue lined on either side with stately trees has on each side scores of palatial and beautiful private residences. Many of the streets leading from Washington street rival that thoroughfare in point of beautiful homes but none can quite match it, for indeed its equal would be hard to find.

In its social organizations Watertown is fortunate. The Black River Valley Club has a handsome club house on Washington street and a membership of about 300, this being the leading purely social club in the city.

There is a Chamber of Commerce, which has done much toward promoting the interests of the people of Northern New York and which has a membership of nearly five hundred. The Young Men's Christian Association has a flourishing branch with five hundred members and the Railroad branch of the same association has a building in Watertown. The Jefferson County Agricultural Society owns spacious grounds in the city limits and for eighty-nine years has been holding annually a county fair. The Lincoln League, a Republican club for men, has a membership of over one thousand and well fitted club rooms. The Municipal Improvement League, recently organized, has done much towards beautifying the city.

Black River below Mill Street Bridge

Of sporting organizations, the Crescent Yacht Club and the Jefferson County Golf Club stand out prominently. Practically every secret order in America has a lodge in Watertown. A company of the National guard and a state armory are also in the city.

Not the least attractive feature of the city is the fact that it is in close proximity to some of the most delightful summer resorts in the world. Clayton, Alexandria Bay, Cape Vincent and the Thousand Islands, matchless spots in summer, are within a two hours' ride of Watertown. The famous resorts of the Adirondacks are only a short distance away and Chaumont, beautifully situated on the shores of Lake Ontario fourteen miles from Watertown, is rapidly forging its way into the front rank as a summer resort. There are also countless other nearby spots which offer attractions for visitors during odd moments and all told the seeker after a place in which to make a home could search much farther and fare much worse than he would do should he settle down in Watertown and link his fortunes and destinies with those of the leading city of Northern New York.
